Step 2: Member Advice Fee – One-Off

- The default value for member advice fee is $0, unless you agree and specify otherwise below in conjunction with your financial adviser.
- Member advice fees can only be deducted from your super/pension account if they relate to advice you receive about your super/pension benefits, insurance and investments.
- The member advice fee paid to your financial adviser and their Licensee (and quoted in this section) are inclusive of GST. The actual amount deducted from your account may be less than the amount quoted. This is because the Fund may be able to claim a reduced input tax credit (RITC) on some fees. Where the Fund is able to claim an RITC, the benefit is passed on to you which effectively reduces the fee. Note that the RITC rules are subject to change and this may impact the RITC available in the future.

As agreed with my nominated financial adviser, I authorise $  (inclusive of GST) to be a one off deduction from my account for superannuation related advice.

The fee should be provided including GST.

A maximum of 10% of the account balance up to a fee of $11,000 (inclusive of GST), OR a maximum fee of $3,300 (inclusive of GST) where the fee is greater than 10% of the account balance.

Notes:

- Maximum fee above includes GST.

- I authorise the Trustee to charge the member advice fee selected against my account. This fee is for advice I have or will receive about my superannuation/pension benefits, insurance and investments.
- The amount of any member advice fee that is paid to my financial adviser, or their Australian Financial Services Licensee (Licensee) as agreed by me, will be an additional cost to me and charged against my account. A member advice fee will not be charged unless I tell the Trustee to do so.
- Any agreed member advice fee will be charged to my account and paid in full to the financial adviser, or their Licensee until I instruct the Trustee to cease payment or when I change my nominated financial adviser.
